Washington Party

The hospitable home of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Hyde was the scene of a very merry party Thursday evening when they entertained a company of their friends.

The rooms were prettily decorated with American flags and bowls of acacia. Two games in which the "Father of His Country" figured were played. In the first, making words from the letters in "George Washington" in a given time, Mrs. Roy Archibald proved most efficient; and in the second, pasting little hatchets nearest a notch in a cherry tree, Mrs. Mendel came nearest. The prizes carried out the same idea, hatchet, and Colonial hat candy boxes, etc.

Six tables of whist were played, Mrs. C. C. Olds, Mrs. Warren Shelly and Mrs. H. C. Smith tying for highest score for the ladies, while Dr. Merrill led the gentlemen.

Delicious refreshments were followed by music, Mrs. Shelly, Mr. Barron and the hostess each singing several pretty songs.

Circle Entertained

Mrs. H. A. Watrous at her home on the Los Gatos Road, Wednesday afternoon, Feb. 23rd, pleasantly entertained the Pundita Circle and a number of invited guests. It was in the nature of a "Colonial afternoon" and the guests carried out the idea of the period in quaint costumes and powdered wigs. Mrs. Watrous met the guests at the door with an old fashioned "curtsy." A little review in history was caused by the game of "hatchets" bearing the names of noted American women. A short business meeting was presided over by the president, Mrs. Day. Subjects were read and assigned for the balance of the Club Year. A very fine reading was given by the hostess, with piano accompaniment by Mrs. Harry Williams.

The story was—"The Surrender," a romance of the Revolutionary War, by "Carolyn Sherwin Bailey." The refreshment hour was enlivened by jokes found on cards in the napkins.

Musical Program Given

The concert given Tuesday evening by the Danish Musical Club under the auspices of the Guild, was enjoyed by a full house. The members of the club, Prof. Theodore Petersen and his two daughters, Alvina and Gladys Petersen, are all artists in their various lines, and every number of the program was thoroughly enjoyable.

Prof. Petersen played the violin, cornet and mandolin; Miss Alvina the violin, the piano, and Miss Gladys the cornet. Miss Alvina has a clear, liquid soprano voice and Miss Gladys a delightful contralto and both their solos and duets were strong features of the program.

The readings, especially the dialect numbers, given by Miss Gladys were exceptionally clever and met with enthusiastic applause. But it was not alone in the rendition of their various selections that the club won their audience, but by their gracious and charmingly unaffected manner.

Following the concert the January birthday committee entertained the February guests. Mrs. Dunphy acted as chairman and under her directions the committee had arranged a very pretty table. A canopy of smilax decked with miniature red hatchets overhung the table, and the hatchets served as favors. Two potted plants hung with cherries were a part of the decorations, which with candles and the lovely birthday cake made an attractive picture.

The guests were served fruit salad, sandwiches and cake and the general company punch, tea and cakes.

Home and School Club

The next regular meeting of the Home and School Club will be held next Tuesday, March 7th, at 3:30 P. M. in Miss Sawyer's room.

Prof. Osenbaugh, principal of the San Jose High School, will be the speaker at this meeting.

The grade that has the largest total percent of parents present for the remaining club meetings in this term will be the guests of honor at a picnic which will be given by the Home and School Club to the school children. The winning grade will be furnished with lunch.

The program at the club meeting will be given by the first grade.

The date for the annual Blossom Festival at Saratoga has been set for Saturday, March 18. One of the pleasant features of the program will be a chorus of one hundred voices under the direction of Dean Warren Allen. As many in this locality make a picnic day of our neighbor's celebration, we are glad to notify them of the event.

Must Get Busy

In planning the "Dry Campaign" for 1916, a careful study has been made of the votes cast in 1914, and an estimate made of the additional votes needed to achieve success. The greater part of the additional votes needed must be secured from those who did not vote at all; or if voting, did not vote upon the Prohibition issue. It will be the work of all interested in the success of the campaign to get out all the non-voters possible, who can be influenced to vote on the side of prohibition.

Franklin Hichborn has sent the following figures for Santa Clara County, in which at the last election there were 37,230 registered voters.

The Santa Clara county vote on the Prohibition issue was as follows:

Against Prohibition 16,004; for Prohibition 12,661; not voting on Prohibition 8,565.

Of the 8,565, who did not vote on Prohibition, 2,427 went to the polls to vote for Governor, but refrained from voting on Prohibition. To increase the vote in Santa Clara county the 40 per cent which is necessary to bring the Santa Clara county vote up to what it must be increased to if Santa Clara County is to give her 40 per cent increase, you must add 5,064 to the affirmative vote for Prohibition, which will make the affirmative vote 17,725 instead of the 12,661 affirmative votes cast for Prohibition in your county last year.

In my judgment, Santa Clara County can, if there be good precinct work, be made to give a far larger vote for Prohibition than the 40 per cent increase. The 8,565 who registered but did not vote on Prohibition are good people to work on.

A number of Masons of San Jose, Santa Clara, Los Gatos and Gilroy were also present, making quite an auto procession. Those present from the Campbell lodge were Messrs. L. D. Bohnett, J. F. Duncan, I. W. Snow, W. I. Merrill, Ralston Allison, R. G. Archibald, C. E. DeSelle, T. L. Mendel, Geo. Whitney, G. S. Robson and H. C. Smith.

Apportionment

The second semi-annual apportionment of state money to the elementary and secondary school has been made. According to this apportionment Santa Clara grammar schools with an average daily attendance of 10,693 will receive $80,625.22 or $7.54 per pupil. The secondary (high) schools of this county with an average attendance of 1995 receive $11,322.60, of which Campbell receives $819.93. This completes the apportionment to the high schools this school year.

SAW THINGS IN NEW LIGHT

Society Woman Profited by Rector's Sensible Remarks on the Subject of Snobbishness.

"But, my dear Doctor Brown," exclaimed Mrs. de Puyster, "however excellent these people may be, you don't mean that I ought to treat them as my social equals?"

"And why not?" asked the rector. To the lady his voice did not seem so sympathetic as usual.

"Well, really," she returned, a little embarrassed, "it seems obvious that they are different."

"The differences you speak of are mostly petty, silly, and wicked distinctions without real significance. What clothes a man wears, who his father and mother were, what opportunity for schooling he had or was denied—do these things give any intimation of the man's essential worth or value?"

"Once, at a fashionable summer resort, I sat watching the crowd bathing. Among them three men were conspicuous. It was a pleasure to see their broad shoulders, their deep chests, their splendid limbs. Finally they left the water and disappeared into one of the bathhouses. Presently they reappeared in overalls! They were workmen building a house near by. To most of those who saw them, their physical superiority had vanished under their working clothes."

"Some day," continued the doctor, "we shall all lay aside our clothes and our bodies as well. Some who on earth seemed very impressive with their fine clothes and their attractive faces and bodies will then look pitifully shriveled and shrunken."

"If you could look into the servants' hall of some great castle and see the butler refusing to associate with the stableman, and the cook holding herself superior to the chambermaids, it would seem to you utterly silly and ridiculous for people to make such ridiculous distinctions! But are they really more absurd than we when we make the same kind of distinctions among our fellows?"

Mrs. de Puyster smiled. "I suppose we are absurd," she said.

"If we were only absurd it wouldn't matter so much," returned the doctor. "But it is not simply ludicrous. Snobbishness isn't a minor fault or a venial error. It's one of the great sins. If I'm a snob, it's because in my heart I despise my fellow men, and have set myself up as their superior. I have repudiated the very heart of the message of Christ. I have cut myself off from the common humanity with which Christ proudly identified himself. 'Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me,' means that Christ actually lives in humble humanity. For me to be a snob means that I have cut myself off from humble humanity—and consequently from Christ himself! That is a serious thing!"

Mrs. de Puyster no longer smiled. "It is a serious thing. It's an awful thing!" she cried. "God be merciful to me a snob!"—Youth's Companion.

How to Get Efficiency.

Here is some advice to the tired business man. If you are not getting efficiency from your typist don't "can" her, but get some music. This will speed up tired typewriter performers. The idea is suggested by the manager of a business college, says the New York correspondent of the Pittsburgh Dispatch. He claims that he gets better work from his students when he turns on the phonograph and it plays some lively foxtrot. And now the crafty employers here are thinking of putting the suggestion in action. The scheme is to turn loose a lively record on a talking machine, the lively strain offsetting the tired strain under which the typewriter operator is laboring. The moment the weary worker hears the invigorating sound she strikes her key on the typewriter, and then all of the keys. Somebody has observed that the modern dances do not confine the action to the feet. No, the shoulders, elbows and arms all have a chance to move. Every step forward is welcomed by progressive business men, so why not one-step?

Whistle Scared Thieves.

S. Magari's ability to give a correct imitation of a police whistle on his fingers saved the day's receipts of his restaurant when a lone robber entered and drove him out of the back door. "Get out of here, quick!" the robber commanded as he entered the front door of Magari's place, flourishing a revolver. Magari dropped a paring knife and ran for the rear exit. As he passed through the door the robber fired a shot at him. The bullet embedded itself in the door casing.

On reaching the open Magari, with his fingers to his lips, cut loose with a shrill whistle so nearly like the metal whistles used by policemen that the robber ran out of the place at top speed.—Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

Rice Culture in Porto Rico.

Experiments in lowland rice culture recently started in Porto Rico are arousing much interest there, because rice is the chief food consumed in the island. Porto Rico has spent approximately $5,000,000 annually during the last four years for this grain, and is the largest export consumer of American-grown rice.

Long's Peak in Winter

D. W. ROPER of Chicago recently made an unusually dangerous ascent of Long's peak, the giant of the new Rocky Mountain national park, and has given details of the exploit in a letter to a friend.

Long's peak, which is 14,255 feet high, was considered unclimbable for many years. Its summit is reached by passing from Boulder field, which lies 12,000 feet up, through an opening in the rocky wall known as Keyhole out upon the side of a sharp-angled slope covered with perpetual ice and snow, which slants from near the summit far down the mountain side to end in a nearly precipitous drop of a good deal more than a thousand feet into Glacier gorge.

This is called the Trough and it is ascended by steps cut in the ice and snow, which are frequently obliterated by fresh snowfalls and must be renewed continually. So far, none of the hardy scalars of the summit, which include, by the way, an increasing number of women, has lost control on this dangerous slope, though stories are whispered of occasional slips caught just in time.

Mr. Roper, while ascending the lower levels, met four young men, two of them with frozen feet, who had been held overnight on the summit by a snow squall obliterating the steps too late in the day to enable them to cut new ones on their descent.

In the Face of a Gale.

"As there was a heavy snow on the summit of Long's peak the night after ing the steps in the ice through the Trough. My fears were well founded. More than half of the steps were not only filled but entirely covered and obliterated, so that it was impossible to locate them. There were several places from fifty to a hundred feet wide or more between the boulders along the side of the Trough where there was no sign of any footing, and if one should start to slip it was hard to see just where one might expect to stop. The only certain place appeared to be down near Glacier lake, some 2,000 feet below.

"In these places I made steps by repeated kicks with my heel, at the same time making hand holds higher up with my hands in the crusty snow."

"Fortunately, I was able to find the steps in that portion of the side of the Trough that was covered with ice. In one place I attempted to go down over a boulder by lowering myself feet first, but after getting so far that I swung freely below the chest I found it impossible to find safe footing and had to climb up again over the boulder. As this boulder was located in a position with a steep crusty snow slope below it, the climbing up was attended with some danger, and especially so as the first part of the climbing consisted of a series of kicks and 'wriggles' in an attempt to lift my clothing clear of the rough boulder and to move forward at the same time until I could bring my foot or knee into action."

"The trail was very dim after getting out of the Trough. Several times

VIEW OF LONG'S PEAK

I arrived at the inn," writes Mr. Roper, "I was advised not to attempt the ascent for several days on account of the danger. I therefore waited until the fourth day after the snow. Starting about seven in the morning, I rode alone and without guide to Boulder field, where the horse was left. I had some description of the appearance of the Keyhole, and it had been suggested that perhaps I would find difficulty in getting by the snow in the Trough and might do better to climb the boulders along the side. The geological survey map constituted the rest of my information about the ascent."

"Walking across Boulder field I was somewhat sheltered from the wind, which was blowing a gale from the southwest. On reaching the Keyhole I found the wind blowing against me so strong that I could hardly stand. I therefore retraced a few steps, sat down in the lee of a projecting rock and ate a portion of my lunch. It was so cold that there appeared to be no prospect of rain at higher altitudes, and I therefore left at this point my knapsack, containing my raincoat, the remainder of my lunch and a few other incidentals."

Cutting Steps in the Ice.

"After leaving the Keyhole the general direction of the trail was indicated by a few cairns, but they were very scarce. The footprints in the snow of a party that had made the ascent the previous day were of considerable assistance and particularly so in the Trough, where I found their steps cut in the ice and crusty snow. I did not have to cut more than six or eight steps, and as I had nothing that could be used for the purpose except my hunting knife this was very fortunate."

"The ascent from the Keyhole to the summit required an hour and thirty minutes. In the Trough I was on all fours about half the time and did considerable climbing over and amongst the boulders. I would characterize the ascent as dangerous rather than difficult. There was no snow of any consequence except in the Trough, although the notes in the register on the summit showed that the party had found two inches on the summit the previous day."

"I had taken opportunity to enjoy the many magnificent views on the way up the peak, and it was fortunate that I did so, as I there found a storm gathering, the clouds being about on the level with the summit of the peak and snow starting to fall. I made a slight tour of the summit and then located and examined the register of the Colorado Mountain club."

Fighting a Snow Storm.

"The snowfall rapidly increased, so that in twenty minutes after reaching the summit I started the descent, as I feared difficulty due to the snow covering myself a considerable distance above the trail, and nearly descended through the transom, if there is one, instead of the Keyhole. The difficulties in the Trough and in losing the trail resulted in my making the descent to the Keyhole in an hour and thirty-five minutes, or five minutes longer than the time required for the ascent."

NAMES LIVE IN HISTORY

Brilliant Array of Fearless Seafaring Adventurers Belonging to Norway.

"The ice party this year consisted of Storkensen, Andreassen and Thomson, all Norwegians except myself," wrote Vilhjalmur Stefansson in the opening sentence of the account of his polar expedition. Apparently he classes himself as American or Canadian, as he is, and gives no credit to Scandinavia for the part he played in the narrative of what happened. It was more than coincidence that his companions were "all Norwegians." The annals of arctic and antarctic exploration are filled with the exploits of Norwegians and few explorers have been more modest than they regarding their achievements."

The Norsemen have been fearless seafaring adventurers since the days when the vikings, in their little ships, overran the west coast of Europe and time after time raided the British Isles. They reached out into the unknown north seas to Iceland, then to Greenland, and nearly a thousand years ago Liep Ericson and his crew visited the land they knew as Vinland and what we know as New England. The old tower at Newport is there as evidence of their coming centuries before Columbus had sailed on his memorable voyage."

Within the memory of all of us Capt. Fridtjof Nansen brought new luster to Norway's fame in exploration when he navigated the northwest passage in his ship Fram. Capt. Roald Amundsen brought back to civilization the first definite scientific data on the magnetic pole, which he located in the far North. A few years later he was first to reach the south pole, having arrived only a few weeks in advance of the ill-fated Scott expedition.—Indianapolis Star.

MATERNAL INSTINCT IS ALIVE

Not Necessarily Abandoned by Women Who Have Chosen to Pursue a "Career."

We often hear that women used to be more maternal than they are now. The difference was that they had larger families and were compelled to do more work about the house, because modern household conveniences were then wanting, asserts Dr. Mary Kent Isham, a successful New York physician. The fact of a large family is not necessarily an indication that there is much maternal feeling in the mother. The maternal instinct is found in women who want children—whether they have them or not—and who occupy themselves preferably in ways which deal with the young.

The majority of single women and of women with careers do not lack the maternal spirit and do not lack the sex instinct, but they are wanting in a certain recklessness which would enable them to accept the wrong husband or go in for what has been called "unbridled motherhood." They are perhaps trained into too great self-control and caution. Others are too intense and passionately maternal to marry. They must have whole crowds of children with whom to deal, like the old woman in the shoe. The husband is a secondary consideration. A large number of women who are engaged in social service and who, for various reasons, have been deprived of homes of their own, or find the duties in their homes too limited, are spending their generous helping of maternal energy in a larger social field.

SWEEPS DUST FROM RECORDS

Automatic Cleaner for the Phonograph That Will Save Much Time and Labor.

An automatic cleaner for phonograph records, invented by Joseph W. Pitcher of Washington, D. C., has just been patented. It consists of a ring that fits around the sound box, an arm extending downward therefrom just behind the needle, and a brush made of alternate layers of bristles and felt. The bristles engage the surface of the record first, removing dust from the lines, and the felt sweeps small particles out of the needle's way.

SHOOK PEARLS FROM GOWN

One Woman at Least Who Believes That Tight Styles Are Strictly All Right.

Persons in the rose room of the Astor, one night recently, were interested when they heard a pretty woman with diamonds glistening on dainty hands say:

"The pearls have gone—the string snapped in two."

She wore a coat with a moleskin collar, the New York Herald states. Her husband suggested that she take off her coat. She then tugged on the end of a string and brought forth a sad looking affair—six pearls left at the end of the necklace. After standing up once or twice and engaging the attention of a waiter she brought forth a handful of pearls by the time her husband returned from a telephone call.

"Good thing this dress was tight," she laughed.

They proceeded to count the pearls before they ate soup and it was the consensus that three pearls had strayed from the string.

Again the pretty woman stood up, shrugged her shoulders. Result, one more pearl. Two were missing. They ate their dinner, not forgetting the mishap, and started out of the dining room in Indian order, the woman first, then the husband, then the waiter who had aided in picking up pearls, and finally a head waiter. The waiters had orders to keep their eyes open for pearls.

Would the woman tell her name? No.

TO PROLONG LIFE OF GLASS

Simple Arrangement Which Requires Only a Quantity of Stout But Pliable Wire.

Cups are often hung in china closets or in cupboards by hooks, thus prolonging their lives by keeping them out of harm's way. A device for securing the same safety for glasses should, it would seem, also meet with popular approval.

A device has been placed on the market which will meet with much favor. It is very simple and can be made at home if one will but secure some stout though pliable wire. The wire is fastened to the wall with a screw or staple and then twisted to the shape shown in the sketch.

Vain Hope.

"Everybody says I'm light on my feet, father," said the glided youth.

"Umph," replied the disappointed parent, who didn't raise his boy to be a dancer. "I wouldn't go so far as to wish you had been born clubfooted, son, but I do wish your head was heavy enough to act as a sort of drag to your feet."

Island of the Unclean

IT IS A Philippine island, Cullion—with the accent on the on—and it is the place of happiness for the unclean. Of course in its great work of making happiness it has had the co-operation of man—the American man. While Americans have been finding and using much in the Philippines, perhaps they have never levied upon nature for a finer service than that at little Cullion. The people whom it makes happy are the lepers.

Making lepers happy—the phrase seems anomalous, because we have never thought of happiness in connection with lepers. We know that a leper colony means isolation, one of the grimmest things we can imagine, and it never would occur to us that isolation under those particular circumstances could by any possibility be other than terrible and dreadful.

When the Americans went into the Philippines they discovered that the Filipinos were not taking proper care of their lepers, says a writer in the New York Evening Post. The bureau of health, under Dr. Victor G. Heiser, set aside Cullion, one of a small group of southern islands about a day's sail from Manila. It had three or four fishing villages on it, of which the largest was Cullion village. Its inhabitants were transferred to nearby islands and the site of the old town of Cullion was taken for the new leper colony.

One of the interisland boats of the bureau of navigation, fitted out for this particular work, collected the lepers under the supervision of the director of health. During the year several trips are made about the islands. The sides shunned by their fellowmen, but they will be living with people.

Town a Scene of Activity.

Yes, it is a town that receives life, amusements, and, above all, occupations. For, contrary to the general idea, while at the present time there are about 3,200 lepers in Cullion a comparatively small number of them are kept in hospital at any one time—perhaps about 400. Of these a number are usually in for pneumonia, dysentery, malarial fever and other illnesses to which leprosy does not immunize victims.

It is a decided surprise to find the colony a scene of such activity and the effect is naturally immediately salutary for the incoming citizens. And from the moment they leave the quarantine buildings their entire life assumes a new aspect. For many and many a leper it is the very beginning of life, even though it comes toward the end. That is Cullion colony.

The island is fifteen miles long and nine or ten miles wide. Both the island and the town are divided into two unequal parts called the clean and the unclean. The clean is merely the portion reserved for the headquarters, and for the workmen employed, of whom there are about 200.

In the unclean district the lepers are. But in the transition from the clean to the unclean, one has no impression that there is a ghastly contrast between the two districts. Contrary to the general notion that leprosy is a disease whose symptoms are the dropping off of fingers and toes lepers are brought down, as suspects, from the island districts to the coast towns, and there kept awaiting transportation to the colony. Several physicians are with the boat, and also a bacteriologist from the Manila bureau of science. Before the suspects can be taken aboard he must be found to be bacteriologically positive. When the work was first undertaken the American doctors and their subordinates were not overfamiliar with leprosy except in its advanced stages. At first only the advanced cases were taken to Cullion, but as the colony has grown and the confidence of the natives increased, it is now possible to collect the incipient cases as well.

Cullion a Coral Island.

The scene as one comes in toward the island gives the impression of serenity. The bay is deep and amazingly blue, and it swarms with varieties of the most brilliant fish. Reaching out from Cullion, crescent wise, is a peculiar and fantastic coral formation called the Coral Islands, jagged and impassable; within them rises Cullion itself, hilly and green and serenely beautiful. Except in typhoon seasons these waters are quiet, and as one nears the shore one has the sensation of being awaited by some spirit of friendliness and peace—an effect never lost upon the little throng of men and women—and often children—who stand forward in the vessel looking with wondering eyes upon this spot where they are to spend the rest of their lives. They have been expecting a prison, and what they are beholding has the appearance of a home.

There is the colony. The little white houses or shacks with their garden yards cover the hillside, and the larger buildings showing here and there, the hospital, the quarantine buildings, the theater, the church on the headland, and other. But it is on the wharf that the interest centers. There all the able-bodied men of the colony have gathered—an eager throng. In the very vanguard of them a trim group of erect men in white uniforms, the Cullion leper band, already playing welcoming strains which greet the newcomers.

These two crowds gaze toward each other eagerly—the little crowd on the boat, the big one on the landing—because in the colony all the tribes of the Philippine islands are represented, and great is the excitement of those who essay members of their own tribe. On the boat the entire attitude has changed. The despondency which the lepers have felt since they were first taken aboard rapidly gives place to an astonished and childlike delight. Not only does the colony appear now to be a home, but for many of the strangers it is the first home they have ever known. They begin to realize that here they will not be outcasts, living in avoided huts and among rocks on hill-and other portions of the body, or that lepers are always unsightly from spots and blotches, the fact is that this condition prevails only in the advanced stages, and in the beginning, especially, the disease is marked by changes so slight that only the expert can identify them. There is no contrast, either, in the general atmosphere of the clean and the unclean parts except perhaps that the unclean is the busier and the happier.

The colony is organized as a town. Besides the shacks, there are tenement houses for about 1,000 lepers. At one time there was even a mayor, with his officials, elected by the citizens from among themselves, but this system was not satisfactory, and now the physician in charge is the head of the colony. To him the complaints are brought, and he is virtually the mayor of the town. The lepers furnish their own police, and their band, and they enact their own plays in their own theater, where they have, too, of course, motion pictures. A special form of money has been put in circulation for the island, and twenty centavos per week is allowed each leper as spending money, which he uses for tobacco and candy and fish, and other commodities.

There Are Few Escapes.

There is one general store, with branches in the two districts. The one in the unclean part is managed by a Chinese leper. It is a new building, made of concrete, and is one of the interesting sights of the colony. Another center of interest is the big kitchen, where the people can bring their bread and other food to be cooked in the big ovens, if they are not well enough to cook in their own ovens at their shacks. Once a fortnight supplies of rice and staples are brought down in a special boat, and these supplies are distributed to the lepers. Most of the yards have flourishing gardens, and the people raise much of their own fruit and vegetables. They also have the freedom of a certain part of the bay for fishing, using rafts for the purpose.

Almost never do they attempt to escape, and when this has happened, the fugitives have usually asked to be sent back to the colony.

Perhaps their favorite amusement is baseball, with the exception, of course, of cockfighting. Scarce a shack in the unclean part is without its gamecock. This sport is so instinctive with the Filipino that it has not been forbidden the lepers, in whose favor various laws have been a little stretched, as, for instance, the marriage law. Intermarriage is permitted, on the basis that it gives a moral tone to the colony. Few children are born of these marriages. Even if the children live after birth, their lives are always brief, and in all the years in which the colony has been operated, very few of these children have lived to see the age of five years.

Is Your Child In School?

5,000,000 out of the 20,000,000 school children in the United States, suffer from some sort of eye defect, which prevents proper school advancement. There are 300,000 blind dependents in the United States. Most of this blindness could have been prevented if the eyes had been examined and given proper care at the right time. I will be at Dr. Merrill's office Monday, March 13. Bring your child to me on that date and let me give its eyes a thorough examination. Mrs. Cowles' Letter

We went on shore at Ponta Delgada. It was most interesting to be in an Oriental city once more, but the poverty manifest everywhere was oppressive. Just before Christmas, yet not a Christmas toy anywhere, and never a Christmas wreath or sprig of holly. No Santa Claus here! What a contrast to the stores in Boston which we left only a week before. They say the Portuguese on these islands go to America to earn their money and then come back to the Azores to live. One would think it would make them lose their heads to see the way money flows in America. How rich and beautiful and luxurious America seems any way as soon as one leaves it. And it is! To whom much is given, of him also shall much, etc.

On the island, which of course is of volcanic origin, we saw lava used in every way. Crushed up lava for garden paths; blocks of lava for fence walls and walls of buildings; but the most striking feature of the town was seen in the truly remarkable bonnets worn by the women. The bonnets themselves were perhaps 2 1/2 feet from front to back and the capes always worn with the bonnets extended to the ankles. All seemed to be made of a dark navy blue broad cloth. A fellow passenger paid $12 for one. These bonnets were not worn as a religious garb but by the ordinary woman. Mr. Cowles took a picture of Frederick standing beside a bonnet and the little old lady under it. We hope it turns out well.

Aside from the bonnets, the most remarkable thing about this city of 20,000 people was the coloring of the outside of the houses. Bright blue, green, pink and yellow houses all stood side by side in gorgeous array. All of them, too, built right onto the street in oriental style. But, oh, the poverty. A few miserable grocery stores and a few equally miserable curio stores bespoke the poverty of the city, and yet such beautiful islands to look at. One mountain peak rose 7,000 feet right from the sea. All the islands were mountainous and green and pretty. At Ponta Delgada quite a business was done in growing pineapples under glass for the European market before the war.

Lisbon, Portugal, Dec. 19
Here at last and the sun shines and the wind is at rest and the sea blue, just as tho they hadn't been nearly killing us for the past ten days! We came into port about 3 this morning and no mortals were ever more thankful to see land, any land, than were these mortals, for we have been having perfectly awful weather again. I have never in my life experienced such a prolonged gale.

It did seem as tho the old boat would break in two when poised up on the crest of a billow or go under when we were down in the trough of the seas. Things came to a climax yesterday morning when an invalid lady sitting beside us on the deck, went rolling over, chair, rugs and all. Mr. Cowles, deathly sick himself, sprang to the rescue and I frantically untangled myself to help both of them. I was sent sprawling. Then there were the three of us all in a tangle up against the railing, and only that bit of iron to keep us all from going into the sea. Frederick, the sole spectator, stood holding onto the railing and laughing until he, too, was literally rolling on the deck. It was funny, but not quite so funny to us as it would have been the first day, for after you have been banged around for days, the novelty does somehow lose its edge.

As night came down upon us and up on our still raging sea, curtains were drawn across every port hole, in order that submarines might not so easily spot us. It did make us feel creepy and Mr. Cowles and I seriously discussed going to bed with our clothes on. I finally decided, however, that it must die I would die as comfortable as possible. So I said my prayers, tumbled into my bunk, braced myself against a rack as usual to keep from being shuffled up and down and then went to sleep.

At 3 a. m. our whistle blew at a terrific rate and, oh, joy! we were coming into port at last. Dear people, safe on land, over there in blessed America, can you imagine the relief it was to be safe and still in a neutral port?

The small Portuguese boat, the San Miguel, which is to take us to Madeira, lies at anchor near by. We have been looking at her rather critically today and with a good deal of dread. Oh may she treat us more kindly than this old "Roma" has done! We go on board her at 9 a. m. tomorrow. I'll let you know from Madeira how our next run goes off!

Mr. Cowles, Frederick, Mr. Fry (our missionary friend), and I have been on shore today. We visited two old Roman Catholic churches, one where the royalty worshipped before royalty ceased to be. Before we knew it, we were shown into a side room, where there were a lot of preserved (?) corpses of 16 Potugal's kings on exhibition under glass covers! One look at one, was more than enough for me. Old Pharaoh's mummy in Cairo was quite decent and handsome in comparison. You may be sure Frederick took no peek at these gruesome objects. Horrors! Think of having money made out of you in this way after you are dead and can't object!

It was delicious to be on land; lovely to walk upright; fine to sit steadily at a lunch in a restaurant; sumptuous to get a drink of odorless water; and good to come back to our now steady ship and

Fire Pressure Tested

The Campbell Water Company which has installed a new pressure pump at the power house for fire fighting purposes instituted a pressure test last week. The fire company used several lengths of new hose and tried out every hydrant on the system. The pressure at the various points ranged from 65 to 70 lbs. and gives the town a most adequate fire protection. This move is a very generous one on the part of the Water Company and should be fully appreciated by the residents.

Won First Game

The first C. I. F. baseball game of the season was played Saturday afternoon between Palo Alto and Campbell. The game was slow and unsteady on account of the showers and wet grounds. A fine double play was made, Steindorf to E. Kennedy to Ludwig, at a critical point in the ninth when the score was tied. Our boys won out in the tenth with the final score of 13 to 15. The Campbell team: Oliver, c; Pierce, p; Ludwig, 1b; Kennedy, 2b; Price, 3b; Steindorf, ss; Huntley, lf; Duncan, cf; Campbell, rf. Ralph Gardner kept the record and G. C. Bradford umpired.

The team goes to San Mateo, Saturday, for a second C. I. F. game. The trip will be made by E. C. Merrill's auto truck, 50c for the round trip. There is room left for a few more non-students.

Methodist Church Notes

The members of the Sunday-school orchestra were entertained at the parsonage Friday evening by Miss Ruth Lloyd. Millard Berry came over from Sunnyvale for the occasion.

Another fine Easter cantata has been secured for the choir, even superior in some respects to the one given last year. Mr. Cramer is calling for a first rehearsal Tuesday evening.

The Official Board has authorized the installation of a fire extinguisher on the church premises. This is not intended, however, to discourage any spiritual fire that may be burning in our midst; indeed, nothing would please our official members more than to see smouldering revival fires bursting into flame in the church and community.

We hope to see all our people, so far as possible, present at the communion service Sunday morning. The pastor will speak in the evening on the life and character of Lot. Miss Stella Leviston has charge of the E. L. meeting at 6:30 P. M.

The hour of the mid-week service will be 7:30 hereafter, instead of seven o'clock. The monthly business meeting of the League will follow the prayer meeting this week.

The Methodist Ministers of the valley will meet at the College of the Pacific next Tuesday afternoon and evening. Lay members of the churches are welcome at any of these meetings.

Defendants.
Action brought in the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the County of Santa Clara and the complaint filed in the office of the clerk of said county of Santa Clara.

The people of the State of California send greeting to Charles A. Hunt, as Administrator of the Estate of E. M. SUPPLEMENT

MARCH 9, 1916

Busy Session

The Improvement Club held an interesting meeting last week with almost a crowded house in attendance. The matter of a new school house was the chief drawing card and after the general routine business the special School committee reported, submitting several sketches of plans. P. Arnot, C. B. Miracle, R. Alison and S. G. Rodeck spoke for the committee and a general discussion followed, many of those present bringing in various suggestions. President Rodeck, on motion, was authorized to appoint a committee of two to work with him in conjunction with the school board for the purpose of arriving at a definite plan for the school. C. B. Miracle and R. Alison were so appointed.

The Lighting Committee reported that enough money had been subscribed to pay for twelve large street lights for a year, and that they will soon be installed.

Sewing Exhibit

The Sewing classes of the Grammar School had some work on exhibition Tuesday, which was remarkable considering that they have had instruction only a year and a half. There were a number of middy blouses and some underwear, and the 8th Grade girls are going to make their graduation dresses later.

Considering the very cramped quarters in which the work has to be done, and the inadequate facilities to work with, Miss Clark has accomplished wonders with the girls.

It is altogether too much to take from any teacher without additional salary, and it is up to the patrons of the district to see that in some way, there is teachers' salary money to properly pay for such valuable work with our pupils.

Have Smith print it.

Won A Fast Game

The Allied Printers of San Jose went down to defeat before the fast High hitters Wednesday by a 5-4 score. Scott did the local mound work fanning 8 in 6 innings and Huntley blanked 4 in the remaining 3 innings. While Scott allowed but six scattering hits, the outfield gave excellent support and some very clever playing was done by the infield. The team is developing some fine speed.
